The Catherine Booth Hospital is situated in the Montréal borough of Côte-des-Neiges–Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, which is the most populous of Montréal's boroughs, with a population of 164,246 people in 2006 (Montreal Master Plan, 2007). More specifically, the hospital lies within the residential district of Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (N.D.G.). Most of the buildings in N.D.G. were constructed during a time period spanning 1920-1950. A large percentage of dwellings in the area are duplex-style homes, although there are significant numbers of detached homes, and smaller apartment buildings. In recent years N.D.G. has been gentrifying from its working class to a more middle class area.

This borough is a prime example of a Montreal borough which is known for its high quality residential neighbourhoods, while maintaining a relatively high density (7661 inhabitants/ km2 vs. Montreal average of 3625 inhabitants/km2) (Census, 2001). This district is known to have a significant immigrant population with a substantial English-speaking (25%) and bilingual (English/French) (59%) groups (Census, 2001).

Prominent paths that frame the location are rue Côte-Saint-Luc to the North (4 blocks), rue Sherbrooke Ouest to the South (1 block), and Boulevard Cavendish to the East (3 blocks).
