

The Catherine Booth Hospital is a relatively small hospital that acts as an intermediary facility. The physiotherapy and occupational therapy treatments offered there are also extended to the outpatient phase of the patient's recovery. This hospital is what some refer to as a "secondary" facility. Patients who come to this hospital have been referred or transferred from a primary hospital. A secondary facility does not provide acute care, and as such does not have an emergency room or related facilities. It is important to make note of the fact that the mandate of the C.B. hospital is not to serve the local N.D.G community per se, but rather greater Montreal as needed. Patients receive care after being transferred to this hospital, not from walk-in visitations from those living nearby. It is common for visitors/patients to have only very loose geographic connections to this site.

Physically connected to the hospital structure is the Salvation Army Montclair Residence for seniors. The Salvation Army provides funding to both the residence and the hospital, but there is no further, formal connection between the two bodies. There is a communal relationship though between the two buildings and when there are special events the residents are invited to the auditorium of the hospital building for entertainment. The structure that houses the residence was once part of the hospital and consequently, there is an internal connection between the two buildings allowing the residences to have access to certain amenities within the hospital.
